The composition of certain books has been decided to be quite different from a shipwreck of faith. what was once supposed. For instance, the book of Isaiah seems to be the work of such a long period of linguistic changes that it seems hard to assign it to one author. Yet even among the scholars themselves there is a difference of opinions. Other books indicate that they belong to another age than that assigned by common belief-some parts of books seem to be questioned. But the critics do not agree in many things. Dr. Gorden, of Boston, a scholar abreast of the times, says that nigher criticism has in all probability exhausted itself. or manner of their telling it. "Jesus encountered, strange to say, this very mistake which we have been making in our time-men who had perverted the truth by human inventions. They had become slaves to the letter of the Scriptures. They had killed the spirit of their error. He was the severest critic the world has ever known. He showed them that there were certain things in their teachings which they were to let go. These had been outgrown by the advance of the Spirit's work for man. To hold to them as even sacred was to hinder the work of the Spirit, Literal interpretations of the Scriptures had prepared the minds of the nation he came to save, with more prejudice against Him than anything else. He was a destructive critic. 'Ye say an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." should they not say it for it was written in their law? But He said unto them, 'I say unto you love your enemies.' A new day had dawned. The old must give way to the better. It was not a violation of the sacred truth contained in their scriptures, but it was a death to their literal rendering of it. So we have repeated the mistake and this error has again led us to the verge of rejecting the 'mighty spirit

"It is not because I care to discuss these controversial subjects, but rather because I feel the need of doing so, that I introduce this theme. Indeed, I have a great aversion to anything that tends to awaken dispute, but there come times when the popular mind is restless and uncertain, and the only right thing to do is to crucify one's natural inclinations and face the difficulty and attempt at least to assist the faith of the honest seeker for truth. If one oe a leader of religious thought he cannot do less than this and be true. And then one is liable to be misunderstood and even his motives questioned. This is not pleasant, but for the sake of directing faith through difficult passes he must forego all self-interest and self-consideration. For these reasons it seems to me that any true minister of the gospel will seek to discuss these themes which are awakening such bitter controversy in the interests of the faith he regards more precious than all else in the world. The religious world is very sensitive just now on the subject of higher criticism. It is a ghost which is frightening many who do not understand its meaning. It is also an occasion for others who so desire to form reasons for rejecting Christianity and all religious obligation. These, however, who have always been
